Daily Market Report

- Gold (XAU/USD) maintains a modest bullish tone, climbing toward the $4,465 area during the European session.
- The recent dip in the US Dollar is providing short-term support and helping Gold recover from earlier losses.
- Donald Trump's decision to delay potential strikes on Iran has reduced immediate geopolitical pressure, weighing on the USD.
- The extension of the Strait of Hormuz reopening deadline until April 6 has eased market fears temporarily, supporting Gold prices.
- Despite the rebound, Gold's upside momentum remains limited as traders stay cautious about the broader macro outlook.
- Expectations that major central banks—especially the Federal Reserve—will keep interest rates higher for longer are capping gains in the non-yielding metal.
- Rising inflation concerns, driven by geopolitical tensions and energy price risks, are reinforcing hawkish monetary policy expectations.
- Higher US Treasury bond yields continue to favor the USD, creating a headwind for Gold's sustained rally.
- Mixed signals from the US-Iran situation, including denial of negotiations by Iran and increased US military presence, are keeping uncertainty elevated.
- Given both the fundamental pressure and a still-fragile technical setup, traders are advised to wait for strong follow-through buying before entering aggressive long positions.
